Empathy Map Canvas:

The empathy map is used to understand the employee who requests licensed software in an organization. It helps the team analyze the user's thoughts, feelings, actions, and challenges in order to design an effective and user-friendly solution.

User Persona

User: Employee

Goal: To get required licensed software installed quickly and legally to perform job tasks efficiently.

1. Think & Feel

- I need specific licensed software to complete my work.
- I hope my software request gets approved quickly.
- I feel frustrated when approvals are delayed.
- I am worried about whether the software is properly licensed.
- I want transparency and clarity in the request process.

2. See

- Manual software request processes (emails or verbal communication).
- Different software used by colleagues.
- Delays in approval and installation.
- No clear visibility of request status.
- Confusing information about license availability.

3. Hear

- "The approval will take some time."
- "We will check license availability."
- Follow-ups from managers or IT teams.
- Complaints from other employees facing similar delays.

- Limited communication regarding request progress.

4. Say & Do

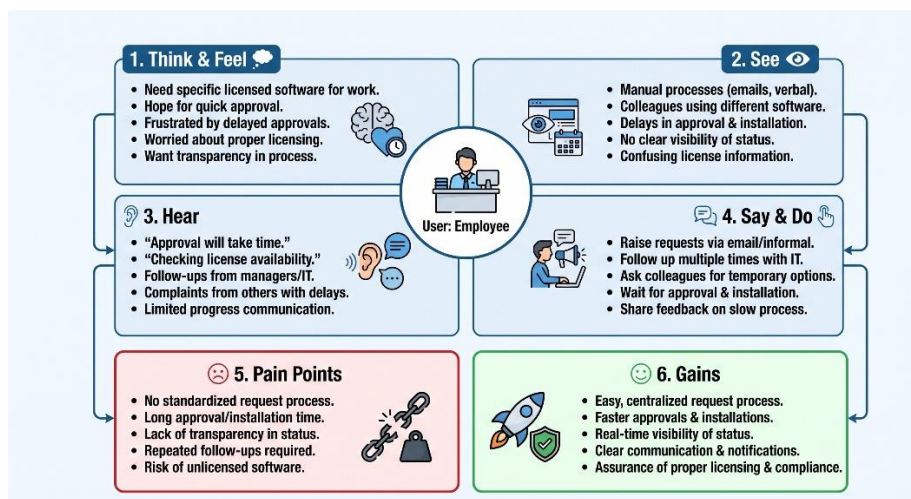

- Raise software requests through email or informal channels.
- Follow up multiple times with IT support.
- Ask colleagues for temporary alternatives.
- Wait for approval and installation.
- Share feedback if the process is slow or unclear.

5. Pain Points

- No standardized process to request licensed software.
- Long approval and installation time.
- Lack of transparency in request status.
- Repeated follow-ups required.
- Risk of using unlicensed or unauthorized software.

6. Gains

- Easy and centralized software request process.
- Faster approvals and installations.
- Real-time visibility of request status.
- Clear communication and notifications.
- Assurance that software is properly licensed and compliant.

Insight

Employees need a simple, transparent, and automated way to request licensed software with clear visibility and faster approvals. This insight leads to the development of an automated Licensed Software Installation Request system using ServiceNow
